Sauron, the lord of the dark, creates rings of power. He also made a master ring that controls the remaining rings, and hence, he was the lord of the rings. Somehow, Sauron lost his ring (Master ring). Later on, after years, he found out that a guy named "Frodo Baggins" had a ring that he got from his uncle Bilbo Baggins.

Gandalf holds one of the three rings of power, but he wants to destroy Sauron's master ring. Gandalf informs Frodo about Saruman's betrayal of his old friend and fellow wizard.

Lord Elrond, leader of Elves, calls a meeting of humans, wizards, dwarves, and elves. Together, they decide to destroy Sauron's ring in the fires of Mordor. They all leave at once after accepting the offer. On the way to the dwarf caves, Gandalf falls into the cave to protect the rest of the team.

After this event, Frodo becomes heartbroken, and they all leave the cave and reach the plains. At this place, they are attacked by Orcs. Frodo and Samwise Gamgee escape the trap and leave on an unexpected journey."

Frodo continues his journey and reaches Mordor. With the help of Sam and Gollum, who lead him to Mordor, the master ring is destroyed. And so, Sauron loses his chance to become the master of all the rings and loses all his powers too. That's how the story of the Lord of the Ring and the Terror of Sauron ends up.

Conclusion:

The Lord of the Rings is a very interesting movie for those who are truly seeking fantasy and adventure in one place. The major lesson of this movie is that there is no bigger evil than the allure of power. And to defend evil, there is no greater power than a fellow's partnership and love.
